First Things First: God

Genesis 1:1-5

Scientists, philosophers, administrators, artists, and simpletons are on equal footing when it comes to knowing God. It's true that scientists have the advantage of knowing God through the mechanics and mysteries of nature. Philosophers stretch the boundaries of knowledge and theories of knowing as they attempt to peer into the mind of God. Administrators draw upon pragmatics and trends and human interactions in order to see the patterns of God at work in the world. Artists ping between reality and imagination, blurring the boundaries of both, questioning, proclaiming, celebrating, denouncing, and offending. And simpletons simply live mostly free of the distractions of equations and theories and trends and symbolisms.

What unifies everyone in the great search for knowing God is that God remains sovereign over his own revelation. As theologian Peter Rollins points out in his book How (Not) to Speak of God, God is the unknowable, knowable God. We can know him only in part—that part God so chooses to reveal to us. No Tower of Babel or particle accelerator or work of art can ever capture more of God than God will allow.

This limit to God's know-ability is connected to his transcendence—a fancy word that means beyond our limits. The scientist will forever be limited by what is measurable, the philosopher by what is knowable, the administrator by what is observable, the artist by what is imaginable, and the simpleton by what is experience-able. It matters not that we live in the 21st century or that Adam and Eve lived in the Garden of Eden. All humans are dependent on God telling us about God.

Thus it is upon God that we must rely for our knowing God. To depend on some other source than God, risks skewing our understanding of God by the biases of that source. If I know of God only through my family, then God will either look a lot like them or not at all like them, depending upon whether I like my family or not. If I rely simply upon a sunset to tell me about God, then I will only see his gentle hues and miss out on his strident black and whites.

Thankfully, God appears to take delight in revealing God's self. His fingerprints are all over creation. His image is reproduced in each and every human. His Spirit co-authored a sacred, self-revealing book. God remains active and involved in the world he created, revealing himself through gentle wisps of air and hurricanes alike. God came into the world in the person of Jesus of Nazareth. It is through Jesus that we come to know God most fully, for in Jesus God revealed more of himself than ever before.

Therefore we can know the unknowable God and reenter the world as scientist, philosophers, administrators, artist, and simpletons empowered with direction and purpose and with love and grace and everything else that God has revealed about himself.

We will start with a nice dinner in the dining room at 5:30 with the presentation to follow from 7-9 pm. We encourage you to come with friends, even friends from outside Dundee. The cost is $25 per couple and includes dinner and childcare for your kids ... a great price for a night out. If you'd like to buy a table and invite friends, the cost per table (4 couples) is $80.

Children ages 5 and under will be cared for in the nursery. For kids 6 and older the Dundee youth will help with a "movie and pizza night" in the third floor large group room. So your kids will have a fun night too! If you have any questions, please contact Stephanie Cota (dscota@cox.net), Stephanie Groenjes (stephanie@groenjes.com) or Andrea Zink (jazink5@cox.net).
